

Copper Stopper - Profits from a plug? Not just a pipedream

It is often those simple, patented products that make a motza in the marketplace.

Plumbers everywhere were thinking there must be a better way to seal a pipe, but it took David Steblina to devise a solution – a simple high-pressure plug that seals water pipes without messy welding.

A simple solution may be, but no one else thought of it. So why give away what could be a very profitable business? Patent protection helped secure the business potential of this inventive idea.

Coupled with trade mark protection David is ready to tackle the world market. Already sales look set to burgeon with inquiries flooding in from the United States and other countries.

Without IP protection, this great idea could easily be ripped off. With it, David has the potential to scoop the market with this simple invention that plumbers are scrambling for, worldwide.